Welcome to 878

Candour 877 with Part One of the Rights for Whites series has drawn wide attention and correctly so. Such is the interest that the series has now been expanded to 4 parts.

Stephen Smith is telling a great story clearly and well. Thus far the information field has, except for the initial nationalist coverage in the then British National Party (BNP) publications British Nationalist and Spearhead, been left to the MSM and other hostile elements.

The professional perpetual students and self proclaimed experts on 'extremism' who sell their self and mutually acclaimed faux expertise to the Security Services of these islands and other lands.

Having created their own field of expertise, always a neat trick, in which they have thus far been almost unchallenged, they now suckle comfortably on the tax-payer funded counter-extremism industry which is in itself a self perpetuating cancerous growth of invention. Prevent & Co. BIG BROTHER or the British Stasi. Take your pick of names. PREVENT certainly do because they do NOT like to specify exactly who they are when face to face with racial nationalists. As your Editor and some of YOU know very well!

Marxist Liberals with an agenda being funded to 'educate' the police and security services.

There are those who condemn us for being 'conspiracy' minded. To them I say read the following...

"I bear no ill-feeling against the gentleman who wrote to tell me that I was mad, because I know that to the British temperament the sniffing of the air of conspiracy does often suggest madness, and not always without reason! The fact remains that if our people since 1914 - and, indeed long before - had cultivated more of a nose for conspiracy the British nation would not to-day be plunging into the depths."

CARRY ON UP THE KHYBER YET AGAIN...

A very unoriginal heading I know but the Carry On film comedy parody, made in 1968, now appears not as low comedy (nothing wrong with that) but as the highest satire compared to recent events.

Yet again Afghanistan has proven unconquerable. Mountainous and landlocked.

You and I knew how this was going to play out.

I confess to a certain smugness but definitely NO satisfaction at being right. Again. As always it is our poor bloody Tommies and their kin who pay the true price.

Imposing a Western style dumbocracy on tribesmen who have NEVER bent the knee to invaders or recognised alien drawn borders was never going to work. Theirs is an unparalleled feat. A total refusal to be conquered and ruled by others. Something that they have done since time unrecorded.

We could learn from them how to be a proud and fearless people again.

It maybe that the boys from the Mersey, the Thames and the Tyne will never understand (some do) that they are cannon fodder for those who place gold above blood. That they are valued as much less than cattle by those who use them in their games and despise us beyond our comprehension.

The people of our Isles have been fooled into welcoming many Afghan allied collaborationists and other corrupt elements with open arms. The alien forces who control our rancid politicians of ALL parties have done as they will always do until finally CUT OFF and removed permanently.

One of the bitter ironies in all of this is that Afghanis have no sense of nationhood except when it suits them in their dealings with their would be conquerors.

They do understand kin, tribe and loyalty. Those things that have deliberately been destroyed in us.*

They may be brutal and cruel in the eyes of those conditioned to be weak. They SURVIVE & WIN!

"This series of articles are about genuine, active, principled British Nationalism (& White resistance). The BNP of old. PLEASE do not join/fund the 'existing' BNP which is just a website (& parasite) that merely collects donations/legacies. Leeching off the previous efforts of others. Do not waste your time and money on them.
The BNP is dead!"

Steve Smith

The BNP entered 1991 in good shape. Its own political efforts in 1990 had seen to that. One final event of 1990 was a good omen: The demise of Margaret Thatcher. After being challenged in a Tory leadership contest by Michael Heseltine she failed to secure a strong enough majority of MPs on the first ballot and had been advised to resign. Which she did.

How would a change of Prime Minister be beneficial to British Nationalists? Depends on the PM. This one (Thatcher) had been a real problem for Patriots since 1979. In the 1979 General Election the old NF probably lost tens of thousands of votes (or potential votes) after Thatcher's appearance on ITV Granada's World in Action programme in January 1978. I think many of us remember this particular episode of the show. She made great emphasis on noting the public's strong concerns about immigration and multi-racialism. Many mainstream politicians over the years have made similar comments. A few have been sincere but most use this as a crude form of vote stealing populism. Needless to say the issues in question were/are never resolved. This applies to Thatcher as well.

The interview featuring Thatcher stood out and created uproar as well as sympathy for one reason. Her words:.. "and I think it means that people are really rather afraid that this country might be rather swamped by people with a different culture"... She used the word swamped again towards the end of her fake verbal polemic on immigration. Millions, if not watching the actual programme, would have seen the clip or read about it. Political dynamite.

Mass approval from many British people and of course liberal-left condemnation and outrage. For many Whites in Britain, especially in inner-city areas, her comments struck home, Margaret Thatcher next potential Prime Minister truly understands our pain, our problems. Her appearance on World in Action may have clinched the General Election in '79.

Of course in the final analysis the public were desperate to get rid of Jim Callaghan's Labour Government due to the chaos and misery of the 'Winter of Discontent' but many, many Britons, White-Working Class in particular, would remember that word 'Swamped' and the hope that with an Establishment figure, leader of the Conservative Party, probably next Premier using such a word in a public broadcast on a Monday night, there would finally be an end to immigration and everything that went with it.

ELECTORAL THREAT TO THE NF

In the years 1976-1978 tens of thousands, possibly hundreds of thousands were prepared to vote NF in a future General Election they now had a better option. To them an easier one and more realistic. Vote Tory, get Mrs T in and something would be done about immigration.

Conservative Central Office in the weeks that followed her comments received tens of thousands of letters of support. In 2014 Fraser Nelson writing in the Spectator magazine wrote a brief piece, titled: "How Maggie's 'swamped' comment crushed the National Front". How sadly true.

The records of previous Tory Governments on immigration, Churchill, Eden, Macmillan and Heath should have indicated that nothing would be done. In fact things became worse for the native population each time a different government was elected. Thatcher's comments, a mere handful of words in one TV programme, drastically reduced the NF's vote in May 1979 as it made its biggest ever political effort, 300+ candidates. It also damaged the NF beyond repair. Splits followed as well as a loss of momentum. Some commentators suggested the NF name became 'toxic' during the late 70s due to the violence associated with its activities. That is a matter of conjecture. I think (strictly personal view) the name became 'toxic' after May '79 because it was associated with massive electoral failure and a once great party divided into four parts and by 1986, eventual oblivion. The public not familiar with fine details of politics would have nonetheless formed a general impression through MSM that the NF had performed terribly and now they had fallen out amongst themselves. The great fight back for the British people disintegrated.

Thatcher was never a 'Nationalist' or a Patriot of any kind. She was a Useful Idiot for Internationalism, Finance-Capitalism, Economic AND social liberalism. Three weeks after her election to office the Vietnamese 'boat people' arrived. There were the riots of 1981 and 1985. Immigration never stopped. The Public Order Act 1986. Single European Act. Anglo-Irish agreement. The problem for us in the 1980s was that she was seen as a champion of ordinary British people even until her political end in 1990.

DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON 80's NATIONALISM

Thatcher's pseudo-patriot image was a serious obstacle during this decade. Now she was gone. Her replacement as PM was politics answer to Mr Bean; John Major. When Major was a leading Lambeth (south London) councillor he was on friendly terms with Ken Livingstone and went out of his way to remove Tories who had Powellite tendencies. This combined with his bank clerk image of suburban mediocrity was never going to enable even the skilful media to invent him as a defender of Britain's interests!

Britain in late 1990 had again entered into economic recession, immigration continued, all manner of social problems, rising crime, creeping inflation, meant the eleven years of Thatcher had been a waste of time. Britain was in an even worse condition. The problems of 1979 (Race & Immigration, Sovereignty, Economy, Society) had simply reappeared in 1990. Only in greater form! Fundamental problems had not been resolved. The economy served the elite not the people. Diminishing independence. Crime on a sharp upward vertical course from the late 80s onwards. An increasingly grim future for the White natives of the U.K.

GENERAL ELECTION LOOMING

In 1991 the BNP was eagerly looking forward to the impending General Election. It could have been summer '91 or the autumn of that year. If not then definitely in 1992. In 1987 there was virtually zero Nationalist participation in that year's General Election. In 1991 the BNP wasn't interested in putting up 50 candidates in order to obtain a 5-minute broadcast slot on TV and radio. It would have been a strain on resources and a waste of money. When the election did arrive we put up 14 candidates.

From our perspective in East London (Tower Hamlets) we intended to fight the two parliamentary constituencies of Bethnal Green & Stepney and Bow & Poplar. When the branch was still part of the old National Front in June 1983 we had contested these two seats.

Bethnal Green & Stepney we polled 800 votes (2.59%) and in Bow & Poplar 596 votes (1.9%). Sub-standard compared to the NF results of a few years earlier. This time (1992) with the returned deposit threshold reduced from 12.5 % to 5% of the poll albeit it with an increase in the funds required from £150.00 to £500.00 we were quietly confident that that we might save one of our deposits. That however was in the near future.

In 1991 many among the White community in East London were still outraged over the legal handling of the racial attacks on John Stoner and Terry Swinney. This important subject will be covered in part 3 of this series of 4 articles.

SOME 70's TACTICS & STYLES

In 1991 Nationalist activity in Greater London was directed towards S.E. London, principally the London Boroughs of Southwark and Greenwich. These parts of London were mirror images of the East London Boroughs north of the River Thames. Predominantly White Working-Class, council housing and affected by mass immigration. These two boroughs (Southwark/Greenwich) had strong NF branches in the late 70s. We decided to hold some activities in these two areas. The theme was still 'Rights for Whites'. It was a simple slogan but a good one.

Our first activity was in Thamesmead, Greenwich, South London. May 1991. An area 'famous' for its hideous brutalist architecture. A concrete monstrosity designed by crazy liberals and sour Marxists. Parts of the 1972 film Clockwork Orange were filmed here. Not surprising considering the grim urban landscape. There had been ongoing inter-ethnic violence and general antagonism between black and white youths on the various estates. An inevitable consequence of Multi-Racialism. After a black youth was killed the media turned up the heat on 'white racism'. According to the MSM this is the only type of racism.

We decided to march through the area to show solidarity with local whites.

Again we were rolling back time to some extent. The first time Nationalists had marched in the inner suburbs of south London for over a decade. On the day (May 25th) we had about 350-400 Nationalist marchers. Red opposition was present. There were scuffles and chanting all the way along the route. At one point we came under a sustained assault of bricks, bottles and stones being thrown at us by our red opponents and black youths. We came through and a short rally was held at the end. Extensive TV coverage in the Greater London area.

There was a nagging, underlying feeling with some of us that these types of activities (marches, demos etc) were past their sell by date. There is no disrespect intended towards those brave souls who organised similar activities in the 70s & 80s. Part of the problem was the sheer amount of time, resources and organisation that went into such activities. With new laws and hostile police forces and local authorities the best part of a week could be consumed arranging a single activity! Time that could have been used for elections and community-based politics.

NEW OPTIONS

The following month we held an activity, which with the benefit of hindsight, could have supplanted the old style march through the streets. Neither did it require much planning or thought.

There was in July 1991 a council ward by-election in Camberwell (London Boro' of Southwark). The late, great activist Steve Tyler (who lived locally) decided to contest the ward.

The tactics of 1990 were applied, intense canvass/mass leafleting. This was/is a potentially dangerous part of south-east London. On the day we assembled a team of just over 100 London activists. We hadn't contacted the authorities (though police were present at the latter part of our activity) because it was bona fide election campaigning not taking place on the high streets but on the interiors of pedestrianised council estates. We had a few Union flags and one man with a hand held megaphone repeating slogans. There were no incidents or trouble of any kind. In over two hours we put over 2,000 plus leaflets and maintained an impressive visible presence. It was a simple, no nonsense operation, local publicity was obtained and many Whites were sympathetic towards us.

The mass leafleting 'day of action' had required minimal resources, planning and organisation. Yet it was still effective. Even by the mid-80's this basic type of activity could have replaced standard street marches. In the election Steve Tyler obtained 132 votes (6.2%). Nothing grand but a vast improvement on 1980's results in this corner of London.

COMMUNITY ACTION: BERMONDSEY

The next political work of note we were involved in took place again in south-east London in Bermondsey (London Boro' of Southwark) August 1991.

A motley rabble of various Reds, anti-British elements and assorted ethnic groups decided to march through a racially aware, majority White area called Rotherhithe in the northern part of Bermondsey to protest against 'racism'. The march was organised by Ken Livingstone's mate Lee Jasper. Maybe they should have tried community-based politics. They didn't attempt to leaflet/canvass the district or engage with the locals (who would have despised them anyway). They simply organised a march and parade through the area with their spurious claims of 'white racism' (the only variety apparently). We decided to oppose this with a counter-demonstration.

Once again we were politically defending London Whites ignored by various political establishments and continually vilified by the media. A static counter-demo was planned for a side street on an estate not far from Surrey Quays tube station. We leafleted the area informing local Whites of our intentions and invited them to come along and support us. We used the Eddy Butler style 'home made' black/white leaflets. The ones with a community-based feel to them.

On the day (24th August 1991) we formed up in the side street where the anti-racist march was due to pass. Initially there were about 80 of us plus a few from the 'Flag' National Front group. Our numbers were swelled by some supporters from a local football match taking place between Millwall and Sunderland. This part of south London was the central heartland for Millwall fans and many of them joined us plus a trickle of Sunderland supporters. By the time the anti-racist parade arrived over 1,000 White Working-Class people were in the side street, part of the patriotic counter-demonstration. Interesting that on this community activity only 10% of the people there were London based British Nationalists. The rest, including the Millwall contingent were locals.

"....Another Brixton"

In the leaflet we distributed we also recommended that the Whites of Rotherhithe/Bermondsey 'put the flags out' in a united show of British patriotism. They certainly did! When we arrived we were greeted by images reminiscent of the Queen's Silver Jubilee in 1977. Whole rows of flats, maisonettes and houses had St George's crosses, Union flags and red, white and blue bunting hanging from windows or over the sides of walkways. The technicolour displays of basic Nationalism were a joy to see.

On the Friday evening before the activity Thames News (A local London based TV network) interviewed people in Bermondsey and asked what they thought of the BNP's presence in the local area. One woman replied.."On Saturday I'll be putting a big Union Jack outside my front door". The interviewer asked why. Her reply.."because we don't want this area turning into another Brixton!".

On the day we waited for the anti-racist march to pass us. We didn't have long to wait. They came past. Assorted banners, different groups, a medley of races and political opinions. Chants, slogans. At first the counter-demonstrators jeered the march as it come past as well as singing patriotic songs mixed in with political slogans. Then someone on the march we were opposing decided to set light to a Union Jack they were carrying! This provoked the local people who surged forwards towards the marchers. Scuffles took place, objects were thrown.

1,000 people, almost all local, joined the patriotic counter-demo in Bermondsey 1991

The police just about contained this explosion of community anger but on this particular day as the counter-protestors had the numbers they continued to press forwards. The left-wing marchers changed direction and headed off towards Southwark Park with the counter-demonstrators in hot pursuit, the outnumbered police slowly losing control. I am not applauding or condoning this type of behaviour by the Bermondsey Whites. When seeking political objectives the instruments of politics (ideas, literature, debate) must come first.

However there is no doubt that the eruption of White rage wasn't merely aimed at one particular left-wing anti-racist march. Similar to the Whites of East London the anger, frustration and frayed tempers were the result of decades of political betrayal and cultural contempt by the establishment political class, biased civil servants and media whores saturated in self-hating Liberalism, laissez-faire Capitalism or destructive Marxism. Add in deracinated Conservatives (just as bad!) then it's accurate to point out that all of these political types have an intense dislike if not actual hatred for the White Working-Class of Britain. Their respective, rancid 'ideologies' reject nature, biology, history and common sense/reality. One can safely conclude that most of our political class (then and now) are actually mentally ill and are suffering from political and cultural schizophrenia!

By late afternoon the anti-racist 'activity' (for it was no longer an organised procession!) was a disorganised rabble cornered in Southwark Park with the police retaining some control. The patriotic counter-demonstrators still some 600-700 strong stood opposite them. Further altercations and object throwing. Eventually the police deployed riot control officers and the actions of both opposing groups came to an end. From our perspective we saw the day as a victory. The red/anti-racist activity had been rendered meaningless. They had achieved no political advantage. They had been humiliated. The good folk of Bermondsey had shown their deep rooted, instinctive patriotism and their vociferous opposition to an unwanted political activity that had encroached upon their territory. Regional TV news bulletins gave this event plenty of coverage (even showed the idiotic flag burning incident) and mentioned the BNP's part in it. It also further cemented our position as Britain's main Racial-Nationalist organisation.

BACK ACROSS THE RIVER

Meanwhile back in East London we carried on our routine political activities. Door-to-door paper sales of British Nationalist and targeted leafleting of our best wards. Various red groups attempted twice to protest against us at our Brick Lane street paper sales on Sunday mornings. Apart from a great deal of noise nothing serious happened.

No elections to fight, council or parliamentary. We slowly prepared for the inevitable General Election which must take place in Spring/Summer 1992.

The BNP's Annual Rally (October 1991) was held in Tower Hamlets. It took place in one of the best venues in the borough. York Hall in Bethnal Green. Impressive stone and brick quasi-classical style building completed in 1929. Magnificent and elegant. It contained large halls mainly used for the election counts, boxing matches and swimming baths. Over the next year we would use this great building on two other occasions.

The rally was a huge success. According to the local paper The East London Advertiser at least 450 BNP members and supporters attended. If stragglers and loose ends are taken into account it could be said that at one stage we had over 500 Nationalists present. The numbers were bolstered by it being a national activity but it was a measure of the party's progress over the last two years. The rally also gave us local publicity and further etched the BNP name into the minds of the local populace.

The year 1991 had given the Tower Hamlets branch of the BNP a breather especially after the non-stop activity of the previous year. The General Election year of this period, 1992, proved to be as busy as 1990. Premier John Major called the election for 9th April 1992. We were prepared and would be contesting both parliamentary constituencies in the borough. With both seats there was an outside chance of saving a deposit.

The two candidates would certainly attract media attention. Richard Edmonds (Bethnal Green & Stepney) and Party Chairman John Tyndall (Bow & Poplar).

To cover the whole borough was beyond us. Probably beyond the old parties but then again they had the MSM to assist them. The postage free election address (leaflet) that applies to every candidate was a great help of course. Every household in the borough would receive a reminder to vote BNP as well as outline our core beliefs/policies. Regarding door-to-door canvassing and mass leafleting sessions we selected the best portions of our best wards to concentrate on. There remained only one activity to organise; the public election meeting.

As previously mentioned in these series of articles certain types of public activities; marches and public election meetings in particular were becoming time consuming and less relevant. Nevertheless we went ahead with one for the '92 election campaign. The publicity might nudge the vote up a bit and might save us an election deposit.

"The nature of your politics"

As we had the whole of Tower Hamlets to choose from for meeting venues we could have selected any municipal venue but decided we would stick to familiar territory, Bethnal Green.

Richard Edmonds was the candidate for the Bethnal Green & Stepney constituency and I was his agent. The meeting would be in support of his candidacy. I went to the Town Hall department that dealt with bookings, saw an official (who was a physical clone of Tony Blair!) and gave him a list of meeting halls we wanted to use. He promised to get back to me by the end of the working day. He didn't. Usual obstruction by officials could be incompetence or political malice. Eddy Butler told me that we needed a guaranteed venue booked for the last week leading up to polling day. We wanted (and got) a place for Monday evening 6th April 1992.

To get the hall booked I had to go back to the Town Hall and again deal with the wretched Blair lookalike. During our meeting he squirmed a lot and avoided eye contact. He wasn't a bad individual but it seemed he was under some kind of political pressure, he was after all only a middle-ranking council officer, a functionary. He hinted, vaguely, that any venue selected would require an element of police approval....."due to the nature of your politics". By 'your' he meant the party. Despite these comments he delivered what we wanted...and what a prize. We were offered York Hall, Bethnal Green. The very building we used for our Annual Rally the previous year.

I suspect (though it can never be proved) 'higher authorities' used polite influence to direct us towards a particular building for our meeting. From a policeman's public order point of view - York Hall - large, easy to spot and straddled by a busy main road would be relatively easy to police compared to a back street school building. Tower Hamlets council just wanted us to go away. Though to be fair the Lib Dem administration were (to deal with) a mixture of sometimes dislike, incompetence and indifference. Most Labour councils would have been a nightmare to deal with.

We worked hard, diligently and consistently throughout the campaign. If we could better the NF votes of 1983 that would be considerable improvement. Since 1979 no Nationalist candidate had polled over 1,000 votes in a parliamentary constituency!

York Hall 2nd time

Monday 6th April arrived. Our public meeting. By now the left had realised our political potential and started to publicly oppose our activities. We expected that a large group of reds would protest outside York Hall. We evolved a simple plan to avoid trouble or disruption. Eddy Butler would take 20 of our most reliable men in a van, enter the hall from the side and set up and secure the building before the bulk of our people and supporters arrived. By early evening the reds were positioned opposite the building behind police cordons.

I had the job of getting the majority of BNP members/supporters to the hall and I received great assistance from our squad of stewards plus we had to be extra vigilant because John Tyndall would be in our ranks and he would be a target for potential red violence. The meeting point for us was ¾ mile away from York Hall. It had be arranged with the police at a meeting at Bethnal Green police station a few days before. At this meeting we had new officers to deal with. The old senior ones had gone. One promoted. One retired. The new senior officer was a Chief Inspector of Indian heritage. Despite our policies on race & immigration and to quote the town hall official..."nature of your politics"..the Indian officer was an absolute gentleman and our dealings with him regarding this meeting were smooth and trouble free. A better police officer than today's crop of cryptic-liberals.

The small team with Eddy Butler secured the hall without any difficulties. Meanwhile down the road myself, key branch activists, supporters and the stewards had formed ourselves into a rough column. The police were there in numbers. But not being overbearing in any way.

Eventually a group of 250 of us formed up and slowly moved off. What was meant to be a casual stroll to the venue became a kind of march. We walked quickly in lines of three and made our way through various narrow streets before turning a corner into a main road and heading towards York Hall.

Local people who saw us were as always very supportive. Some clapped, some cheered or gave us a thumbs up. Before we turned the corner on the last stage of our short journey the barmaids from a pub near York Hall came out on to the pavement and loudly and ostentatiously applauded us! One didn't need a degree in political philosophy to realise why

White Londoners instinctively supported us. They knew we were the only group that represented their interests. Once we arrived at York Hall we noticed the opposition. A mixed composition of 500+ reds. Half were the 'Anti-Racist Alliance', the other half the 'Anti-Nazi League' (ANL). ANL had reformed in late 1991. Its first three 'celebrity' members were Lenny Henry, Julian Clary and Jonathan Ross!

The reds threw stones and other objects at us but we successfully made our way into the great hall. While we enjoyed our meeting the two groups of reds outside briefly started fighting each other. Amusing. The meeting itself was a resounding success, great speeches by party leaders and a truly fantastic atmosphere. As in the public meetings of 1990 a handful of sympathetic members of the public attended the meeting.

This event generated repeated regional TV coverage. We continued our routine election work right up until polling day.

THE 1000 VOTE THRESHOLD

For Tower Hamlets BNP election night was going to be very interesting. There was the outside chance both of our candidates (Richard & JT) could save their election deposits. As already noted, last time Nationalist candidates polled over 1,000 votes at parliamentary level was 1979! Percentages are important (obviously) but the actual number of votes is a good indicator of on the ground support. A certain number of people who take the trouble to vote for us, apart from being Nationalistic to one degree or another, are also giving future signs of a committed and consistent voting pattern. A vote of say 200 in each seat is not impressive.

Come the early hours of Friday 10th April '92 we had our results:

Richard Edmonds (BNP) Bethnal Green & Stepney – 1,310 (3.6%),

John Tyndall (BNP) Stepney & Poplar – 1,107 (3.0%).

We had lost our deposits, somewhat disappointed but we weren't far off. The votes cast was pleasing. Nearly 2 ½ thousand people in one borough in a General Election. It indicated a concrete foundation of support for near future BNP election campaigns. We easily surpassed the NF votes of 1983 and were close to the NF votes of 1979 and the white electorate had shrunk over the previous decade. We had passed the 1,000 votes mark in both constituencies. The party as a whole obtained considerable levels of media publicity and a reasonable number of membership enquiries

THIRD VISIT TO YORK HALL

The elections Tower Hamlets BNP contested in 1990 (along with other activities) had helped the branch (and the party!) grow and raised its profile. By now the BNP name was easily recognised in Greater London and in some parts of the country.

Three months after the General Election we contested another council by-election. It was in Spitalfields Ward which we fought in May 1990. The ward was still ethnically non-white but we felt obliged to contest it to provide some hope to the remaining Whites many of whom in this area had sent us letters of support. The saddest letters were from old ladies who were stuck in the area and alone after their children and neighbours had moved on.

The campaign was low key and confined to selective canvassing, especially as due to the demography of the area whole swathes were not worth working in.

The highlight of this contest was another public election meeting which proved to be the last one of the East London 'Rights for Whites' era.

As before the police and local authority didn't want us selecting municipal buildings, borough wide, in any of the wards we contested. So we were offered the wonderfully designed, aesthetically pleasing York Hall, Bethnal Green again. We had now used this building 3 times in 10 months. It was an impressive venue and we were always pleased to use it. The meeting was a replica of the one in the previous April. A Monday night 24th August 1992. Same arrangements, same route, same opponents. It was a successful and inspiring meeting and regional TV coverage as usual. We polled 67 votes (4.7%). Virtually the same as May 1990.

THE CURVE IN THE RIVER THAMES

London boroughs similar to many municipal divisions in England are amalgamated socialist monstrosities that bear no relation to community needs and local culture.

Tower Hamlets was formed as a geo-political entity in 1965. It consisted of the old parishes of Bethnal Green, Stepney and Poplar (which included the Isle of Dogs). Despite this fanciful formation most people still identified and referred to themselves as someone who comes from one of the original parishes.

Tower Hamlets wasn't one of the largest boroughs in Greater London but from the physical perspective of a small team of party workers it was a large territory to be politically active in. Therefore we always concentrated on certain areas, mainly Bethnal Green. It was easy to forget/ignore many parts of the borough.

Personally I had little knowledge of the Isle of Dogs, sometimes called Millwall after the ward which covered 80% of the territory but also because of the large number of windmills built there in the 19th century. The locals who lived there often referred to it as 'The Island'. Not technically or geologically an island because it was still physically attached to the 'mainland' of the rest of Tower Hamlets but because it was a little peninsula that bulged into the River Thames facing Greenwich. There were two roads that lead to and from 'The Island'. The docks themselves were still being redeveloped though Canary Wharf was completed and the Docklands Light Railway provided transport links to the rest of the borough and beyond.

Nonetheless the geography there created for the local population a unique local identity; East Londoners, Cockneys, residents of Tower Hamlets certainly but also 'Islanders'. A sub-culture but still part of the wider East London.

Prior to the elections we eventually fought there, we only made occasional trips to Millwall. A few sporadic leafleting sessions as we had to concentrate resources. We generally left it alone, though aware that politically it had enormous potential.

A REAL BY-ELECTION BREAKTHROUGH

In the autumn of 1992 a by-election was called on the Island. Polling day:1st October. The candidate was branch treasurer, Barry Osbourne. This time there would be no public election meeting. Eddy Butler (correctly) decided that this type of activity, which had been useful before, was not only time consuming but by now somewhat counter-productive to our overall image.

The three weeks of campaigning involved the standard tactical mix of dedicated canvassing and mass leafleting. The wards we had previously fought in Tower Hamlets had been smaller than Millwall but consisted of dense populations crammed into sprawling estates of tower blocks and closely aligned buildings.

Millwall was different. Bigger area but smaller electorate. We would have to work harder than before and stretch ourselves to the limit in order to cover the ward. The Island contained typical council housing estates but also many rows of pleasant houses built in Victorian England. These rows of small homes had a rural feel about them. One of our new young activists, called Ted, had an intimate knowledge of the Isle of Dogs, its people, roads, streets and pubs.

I vividly remember the first night we knocked on doors, asking people to vote BNP and distributing our literature. It was a revelation! Political street canvassing (similar to commercial sales work) is a hard slog. Sometimes, as in business, you have to talk to numerous people before you get a 'sale'. We, on that first night, a small team of activists chose a street at random to operate in. It was filled with small, brick houses. The first six doors I knocked on said yes to voting BNP and took literature! We soon realised that this ward had thousands of instant supporters. My colleagues (including Eddy Butler who was in his element) had similar experiences when canvassing. A warm, Wednesday night in early September.

By the end of our brief door-to-door session over thirty households had said yes to our message, yes to voting BNP on the 1st October.

MUNICIPAL HOUSING: NEEDS AND NATIVES

A key issue that roused Islanders to anger was housing (again). Important to remember that the majority of local housing stock were council properties, not privately owned or privately rented. Most of it built after WW2 due to the Blitz. Taking momentarily a neutral observers point of view if Liberal-Leftists were horrified by the rising BNP vote in Tower Hamlets they should have seriously examined their housing policies over a twenty year period. The housing policy of need usually (but not always) trumped native origins/longevity on the housing lists. So from a neutral point of view it was beyond Labour & Lib Dem to create a system that all ethnic groups would have been satisfied with.

Now from a White Nationalist angle it was quite obvious that the political class that dominated Council, Town Hall, Municipal departments and the local teaching profession were ignoble, ideological perverts whose detachment from nature (mutant genes?) and common sense resulted, ultimately, in East London Whites seeking radical, political alternatives. They stuck the Bengali Asians in quasi-ghettoes (also betraying inverse liberal racism) which ultimately gave them, the Asians, a base/group cohesion to eventually demographically dominate the borough. Monolithic White estates were broken up by the policy of need always putting larger families first despite some natives being on a housing list for years! This also changed the ethnic complexion of local schools.

Rumours had spread around the Island, a very tight-knit community, that specific housing stocks were being exclusively reserved for Asian families. It was never quite certain whether this was true or not. Trying to obtain accurate information from the council was always difficult. Generally, in many areas of life, it is sometimes best to put aside statistics (which are easy things to manipulate or censor), ignore official waffle, sociology essays and judge a scenario with one's own eyes, instincts and common sense!

The visual reality for Islanders was not only did they perceive a housing disadvantage towards them but that the culture of the Island itself (especially regarding schools) was quickly changing and as was proved over three separate elections ('92,'93 & '94) when thousands of Whites voted BNP, they did not want that change neither did they request, neither was their consent sought! The mass illusion of Liberal Democracy...

The Lib Dems late in the day tried (cynically) to cultivate an image of being sympathetic to the native Whites and at times their literature was quasi-nationalism. However the genuine family-neighbourhood-community of the Isle of Dogs built up since Victorian times decided that, politically, the BNP was the best option.

ISLAND HISTORY

Time for a quick peak at the Island's background. The docks dominated the area from the 19th century onwards. Now of course they are anachronisms surrounded by expensive riverside flats, numerous offices and of course large companies. Parts of the old Fleet street moved here and in some respects it is now a new 'City of London'.

Due to technological innovations and most river freight moving to downstream Tilbury, the docks, from the late 70s, no longer served any purpose. They closed at the end of 1980. The following year (1981) the London Docklands Development Corporation, a government created Quango, had the task of redeveloping the area. The LDDC received much criticism from the locals mainly because they felt they had no political influence over this body that was transforming the area. It's academic now. (But serves as an example. Ed.) The LDDC created a certain amount of local housing but not enough to satisfy local aspirations. Some jobs were created but people from all over London filled these vacancies.

The housing issue (relating ultimately to ethnicity & immigration) and the seemingly distant LDDC quango added to the Islanders sense of political frustration and alienation.

BLITZ TARGET

During World War Two (especially 1940-41) the Island was unfortunately an easy target for the German Luftwaffe. A flotilla of bombers approaching central London from south-east England would follow the route of the River Thames. Even from the night sky an aerial observer could roughly see the London docks covering the Isle of Dogs, Custom House and Bermondsey (south of the river). Probably explains why the present boroughs of Tower Hamlets, Newham and Southwark often received the brunt of the bombing. The most obvious target would be the Island! A geological bulge, filled with docks, that pushed out into the Thames facing Greenwich.

The area faced saturation bombing actually starting on the first day of the Blitz, September 7th 1940, late afternoon. The following year, 19th March 1941, a public air raid shelter at Bullivants Wharf, off Westferry Road, was hit by a landmine dropped by parachute. Estimated deaths 40, wounded 60. Some of the elderly Islanders we spoke to remembered this particular terrible event.

"Vote British Nationals..."

Our political work over the previous three years in East London and S.E. London had made the BNP a household name in Greater London. Many Islanders (curiously) referred to us as the 'British Nationals'. A kind of verbal short hand. The canvassing continued well.

Support was incredible. Bethnal Green had showed strong support for the party in recent years but the surge of approval coming from Millwall was something else. Housing, schools and jobs were big issues for these people but there was also great concern over immigration and the rapidly changing local demography.

Our P.O. Box started to receive mail from local residents. Some of the correspondence was basically expressing support for our political efforts, but some wanted specific help ~could we visit them? Which we did. We couldn't solve their problems immediately but we listened with empathy and provided sound words of advice. This was real Community-Based Politics which British Nationalism had rarely tried apart from the 'Radical-Populists' who left the NF in 1976 and set up the NP which won two seats in Blackburn that year.

ELECTORAL DARK HORSE

After nearly three weeks of solid canvassing we examined our figures we had collated and realised there was an outside chance of winning the seat even though the BNP had done little political work in Millwall. The NF had stood here in 1978 (with a full slate) and received a decent result but for British Nationalists it was still virgin territory.

We made a random guess based on literature sales that we would obtain at least 400 votes (15%+) and this could rise far beyond that if all the ticks on the electoral register (people who clearly supported us) were factored in as well. The Tories (then) were an irrelevance in this ward. Labour were still favourites, Lib Dems just behind them but us, Tower Hamlets BNP closing the gap!

On the night of the count (held at Jack Dash house, a municipal building on the Island) the Anti-Nazi League consisting of a group of 50 were waiting outside. The ANL had distributed leaflets all over the Island urging people not to vote BNP. All perfectly illegal! Outside of an election this is permissible however during an election it can be technically classed as illegal under the Representation of the Peoples Act.

This was because inducing people not to vote BNP would benefit the other parties in the by-election as ANL literature would not show up in their (the other parties) electoral expenses. Eddy Butler and myself officially complained about the numerous times ANL had done this in 1992, even going to Scotland Yard on one occasion, but nothing was ever done about this electoral chicanery. ANL were never punished for it.

On polling night the ANL group outside the council building where the votes were being counted decided that they didn't want to physically confront the BNP themselves. Instead they wound up the local Afro-Caribbean community to attack us, a community incidentally, who had showed zero interest in or opposition to our campaign. The multi-cultural marxists of ANL managed to agitate this community (the youth element of it anyway) so that when we left the council building around 20 odd black youths with 50 ANL behind them prepared to attack our tiny group of 8! This was the maximum number allowed in to watch the count. Therefore our opponents assumed they were in for an easy victory.

Unfortunately for them the rest of our team, thirty strong, was advancing towards the building. A brief contretemps took place between BNP supporters and the black youths. The police arrived and this micro battle instantly ended. The ANL simply retreated leaving a few of the hapless black teenagers to be arrested. ANL simply abandoned them. Three of our people were also arrested.

THE FIRST MILLWALL VOTE

The BNP in October 1992 had produced an election result to match old NF results during their halcyon days of the 1970s.

Right: When a by-election was called on the Isle of Dogs in 1992 the branch treasurer of Tower Hamlets BNP Barry Osborne was the candidate.
On polling day, October 1st, the BNP and Barry received 657 votes. 20%.
After so much hard work could this be the long awaited break-through?

Labour (winners)- 1275, Lib Dems- 1178, BNP- 657, Conservative-182. We had polled 20%. Still quite a way behind the Labour victor but an incredible result anyway plus if we had one more week of canvassing, potentially we could have clinched the seat. Remember we were a minority party with limited resources who faced media hostility and sometimes street violence!

The result was the culmination of three years intelligent political work. Publicity, hard work, Eddy Butler's original yet flexible ideas and, of course, the instinctive patriotism and common sense of the people of the Isle of Dogs.

Searchlight the 'anti-fascist', left-wing magazine commented in one of its articles (at the time) that they had, in collaboration with other 'anti-racist' groups put out thousands of leaflets informing the electorate of Millwall that (their emphasis) the BNP were.."violent, racist, holocaust denying Nazis. Yet large numbers of people still voted for them!"

NEW GOLD!

We had collected around 200 names and addresses of Islanders who were dedicated supporters of our party. They had informed us they would continue voting BNP and were happy for us to keep in contact.

So in November 1992 Eddy Butler and myself started to visit this list of party supporters and gave them party literature. Whereas during the election we were always pressed for time, with these home visits we could have a cup of tea and a long chat with patriotic Islanders.

The Millwall community was heavily inter-connected. Monolithic black or Asian groups who possess similar communities are described in our vile media as vibrant, inspirational groups who provide wonderful mutual support for their members.

Whites who have similar communities are always described by liberal-left freaks as being 'insular', 'narrow', 'limited', 'low IQ!' and possibly the most egregious insult 'culturally boring'. Check out the comments by Matthew Paris (former M.P. and BBC broadcaster who once described the English as 'mongrels not Angles'). Later he castigated the people of Clacton-on-Sea when they elected a UKIP M.P. They were viewed as 'backward' and living in another era.

Ancient Rome as it approached 476AD must of had similar scribblers who actually took delight in the destruction of our culture & civilisation. As the White Race evolved over aeons it continually throws up genetic aberrations who desire the destruction of their own biological community!

As we attempted to build up more 'grass roots' support we met a wonderful range of people. Putting aside dusty history books we met people and the descendants of people who really did make Britain great. One middle-aged woman suggested we visit her son who lived nearby. We did and he and his wife became regular supporters. Our original list expanded as the more people we visited the more offered up names of supporters and potential supporters that we should visit. Individuals we were reliably informed would definitely support the 'British Nationals'. This large (and ever increasing list) formed the political nucleus of people who we would canvass over the next year and ultimately provide the key core of support that saw us victorious in Millwall in 1993. Our winning form would continue...

POPULAR NATIONALISM

British Nationalists often had great difficulty obtaining venues for meetings for branch, regional and national gatherings. Many local authorities had effectively banned us from using municipal buildings due to potential threats from left-wing opponents since the late 1970s. Pub landlords were always worried a Nationalist meeting might be attacked and the premises damaged. So as much as we disliked doing it we frequently used bogus names for booking meetings.

This ceased to be a problem in East London by 1992. Many local pub landlords (covert supporters) actually wanted us to use their properties for political meetings. Obviously they would make a tidy profit on drink sales but they genuinely supported us anyway. By 1992 a good number of public houses were BNP friendly. One in particular was on the Isle of Dogs.

The pub in question possessed an odd shape. It was a long, flat pub. No upstairs parts, similar to a bungalow. The landlord was a local character who displayed minimal fear (either physically or morally). He said we could use his pub for BNP meetings. We had became friendly with him during the recent election campaign. I assumed there was a private room hidden away somewhere we would be using. There wasn't. The landlord said "no, don't have any private rooms but you can have your meeting in the bar when the pub is open to the general public".

He then suggested we used the far end of the bar for our forthcoming local meeting (December 1992). "What about your regulars I asked?". He smiled and said "they'll be more than happy to listen or join the meeting". So we had our meeting, not tucked away in a hidden room but in a pub bar on a busy Thursday night. The meeting was a triumph and as mentioned some of the pub regulars joined the meeting in its latter stages and asked the speakers questions.

We were certainly a part of this community! The 'Cultural & Political bridgehead to the British people' once mentioned by Nationalist writer Joe Pearce had definitely been achieved in this small part of East London!

After Derek Beackon's election victory in Millwall in September of the following year (1993) a journalist writing for Time Out magazine (trendy, left-wing London listings publication) noted something about the people of the Isle of Dogs: 'A peculiar breed. Insular, proud of their docklands heritage and identity as a community and notoriously suspicious of outsiders'. Accurate words indeed. The instinctive patriotism and nationalism of the Islanders in Millwall ward would give the BNP in 1993, a fantastic and inspiring political victory and make the party's name instantly known across the whole of the British nation.

Mark Zuckerberg Spent $419 Million on Nonprofits Ahead of 2020 Election - and Got Out the Dem Vote

https://ny.post.com/2021/10/13-mark-zuckerberg-spent-419m-on-nonprofits-ahead-of-2020-election-and-got-out-the-dem-vote

During the 2020 election, Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg spent hundreds of millions of dollars to turn out likely Democratic voters. But this was not traditional political spending. He funded a targeted, private takeover of government election operations by nominally nonpartisan - but demonstrably ideological - non-profit organizations. Analysis conducted by our team demonstrates this money significantly increased Joe Biden's vote margin in key swing states. In places like Georgia, where Biden won by 12,000 votes, and Arizona, where he won by 10,000, the spending likely put him over the top … The 2020 election wasn't stolen — it was likely brought by one of the world's wealthiest and most powerful men pouring his money through legal loopholes.

American Kids Can't Read, Write Or Do Math, But Are No 1. In Critical Race Theory

https://www.ilanamercer.com/2021/10/u-s-kids-cant-read-math-no-1-critical-race-theory/

...America's kids, the product of an obscenely well-funded school system, rank last in the developed world in reading, writing and math, making homegrown retardation a far more pressing problem in modern-day America than homegrown terrorism... There's no doubt that American kids are drowning in self-esteem... Inflated self-esteem and narcissism not only mask failure, but create pumped up nihilists, ready to unleash on their surrounds, unless met with palliative praise ... Our child-centered, non-hierarchical, collaborative, progressive schooling has produced kids who do not believe they can and should be corrected; and when corrected lash out in anger or bewilderment. Indeed, to listen to our university students speak — is to hear a foreboding amalgam of dumbness and supreme confidence combined.

MISS ME YET?

By J.W. Hamm, Kentuckian

Last midsummer, 2020, the United States found itself amidst chaos distributed across many of the nations larger cities. Riots promoted as protests for Black Lives Matter ensued. The mystery of Black Lives Matter was shrouded in language that obscured the facts. Hundreds of multinational corporations and banks raised money and donated to the cause of Black Lives Matter, however there was obscurity as to what was the so-called movement on behalf of blacks and what was the organization. The organization, Black Lives Matter, was founded by trained Marxist lesbians who had stated as one of their thirteen points that they seek to abolish the traditional nuclear family, which along with single family residential zoning regulations is apparently a form of white supremacy.. The number of things that have recently been accused of upholding "systemic racism" includes math, quality based writing, medicine, science and even the classics.

"Whiteness" is the terminology of the new priestly academic and media class, used to refer to anything that is supposedly oppressive. While The United States has a national debt of 28 trillion dollars and the largest external debt in the world (debt owned by foreign nations), there is no talk about this overwhelming debt in the media, who would like the populace to focus on defunding the police and lgbt promotion of multiple genders. As part of the latest $1.9 trillion dollar COVID relief Bill, the small group of black farmers will receive $4 billion in reparations. The reasoning is that racism apparently led to the decrease of black farmers who significantly declined since 1920. However, it is not difficult to look back; the United States was formerly an agrarian society and nearly half the nation lived on a farm. Today there are between 1 and 2% of farmers. The decreases black farmers have seen cannot be attributed to "systemic racism" but instead to a general decline in farming itself, attributed to depressions, the dust bowl, migrations, technological advancements,, wars and free trade. This is another example of what I've dubbed "black racial socialism".

How can we in the United States, who consider ourselves brethren of our British mother stock overcome the assaults on our race? Recently, China has condemned what it calls an "axis of white supremacy", which includes Britain, the United States, Australia and Canada. Even the "Asian menace" is playing the race card against us. But perhaps the Chinese are onto something, and we should strengthen our ties as Albion's children. There was a meme circulating on social media in the United States around the time of the first lockdowns and riots last summer, a painting of King George III and a caption that read "Miss me Yet?". Have things gotten so desperate in the United States that the children of the colonial revolution are crying out for the Crown to help guidance?

There must be a way to build the bonds that have been broken between us cousins. While in my view, the issues leading to the American revolution went back further than King George III and go back to 1688 or perhaps 1694. Perhaps the first revolution was actually the one brought about by King Henry VIII. But the monarchy was not the initial cause of the American Revolutionary indignation.. Thomas Paine, the radical Jacobin, promoted the anti-monarchical angle. Whether he was a freemason or not is unverifiable, however, his writings had all the marks of an illuminist. He was for the abolition of all traditional religion and institutions, much like Weishaupt and his Jacobin protégé's. His logic was also twisted, as he used the account of King Saul as the ultimate wisdom against monarchy. Howbeit, King Saul was a specific Hebrew King at a specific time and not a divine edict against kingship.

Now Britain faces another revolution through the intermarriage of Prince Harry to a scandalous American actress of non-British race. The media is treating the nuptials as a revolutionary act. Even the royal family has become subject to the modern campaign against "whiteness". American economist Paul Craig Roberts, upon Meghan Markle's accusations of racism directed at the royal family, writes in his recent article, Prince Harry: the Epitomy of the Deracinated White Male, "The reason that the West has no future is that only the older generations were enculturated to appreciate the long struggle to achieve civil liberty and accountable government. For many in the younger generations, this is nothing but the use of words to cover up white racism. By accusing the British Royals of racism, by implication Meghan is accusing the British of racism. This makes her a media heroine. Identity Politics will use Meghan to discredit the royal family and Britain along with white people in general."

American writer, Gregory Hood, has written similarly about the recent controversies surrounding Prince Harry in the article, When Integration means Ruination, "The foundations of monarchy are hierarchy and sacral order. Monarchy can't pursue "equality" without destroying itself. Perhaps Prince Harry fancies himself another Phillippe Egalité, but he should remember that his democratic friends cut off his head in the end. If Harry has set in motion the abolition of the monarchy, there will be no reason to pay attention to Mr. Markle at all."

Hood offers a possible alternative world vision to the destructiveness of progressive cultural Marxism and racial socialism, "A post-Brexit United Kingdom could retain relevance by strengthening ties with the white nations it created, with the monarch as the unifying symbol. All whites, including non-Protestants or even non-Christians could take pride in this vision. Thomas Jefferson wasn't much of a Christian, but had great pride in his Anglo Saxon Heritage and the founding stock. He even proposed the Germanic warriors Hengist and Horsa as the symbols on our national seal."

In Louisville, Kentucky last summer the riots destroyed a statue of King Louis XVI by brushing it in profanity and knocking off his hand, the modern American revolution of "racial socialism" respects no sacred symbols, as evident by the number of Saints and statues of the Blessed Virgin that were destroyed by the anti-fa and Black Lives Matter movement. The attack on King Louis XVI was condemned by Louis de Bourbon, Duke of Anjou, King Louis's heir, who said the hand they destroyed is the hand that helped America win freedom. King

Louis XVI donated voluminously to the American cause and it cost him dear.

Although, the situation is seemingly dire in Britain, in the United States…in South Africa, we have an ancient obligation to be united, working together for our common civilization and it's preservation. The quarrels of yesterday should be put behind us, as we look forward to our common future as a racial family and the heirs of Christian and Western civilization. Democracy today has become a code word for a global surveillance state that tracks and controls the movements of man; devoid of tradition, gender roles, racial memory and economic justice . The war today is for the spirit and the great common law tradition that has preserved our rights and freedoms from time immemorial.

So with that,

God bless America and
God save the Queen!

Fishermen of England

Brexit may have been done in a technical sense but how far anyone can benefit from it must depend on political negotiations conducted by our penny bazaar Palmerston Prime Minister and his merry band of halfwit hucksters.

We can all guess how much good will come of that. The deal for fishermen has been done and they have been done down royally with barely a sprat more to show for independence than they could land before Brexit. The truth is that the foes of England, as ever, lie in Whitehall and Westminster and havens more secret than that.

Candour must cry Out! OUT! OUT! and the time will come when we children of the storm arise and put them out so we can restore the true and lasting heritage that is every Briton's birthright.

Afghanistan: Where did the Afghan National Army go?

(Answer: Most Likely Here and the USA!)

They cost $85 BILLION dollars to arm and train over twenty years. When the Taliban made their move after sensibly and patiently waiting for the bulk of the Allied forces to leave it took the ANA eleven days to evaporate or join the new/old rulers.

The most likely explanation is that the numbers were never there in the first place. The Pentagon apparently 'guesstimated' that it would take 300,000 security forces to at least hold back the Taliban for 'a while'.

The Afghan government, ever obliging, billed the American tax payer for 300,000 men to be fed, paid, uniformed and armed. Add to this the practice of commanders employing "ghost soldiers" so that they could pocket their pay and says Sajjan Gohel, international security director at the London-based Asia-Pacific Foundation and an expert on the decades-long NATO presence in Afghanistan "The numbers on the ground did not match the numbers on paper... And that was well known at the time of President Biden's announcement to withdraw troops."

The British and American military top brass are all part of the MIC* and up to their necks and beyond in corruption. When they leave the military they greasily slide into jobs as lobbyists for the arms manufacturers.

*The Military Industrial Complex

A phrase supposedly coined by President Eisenhower to describe the network of individuals and institutions with a vested interest in influencing politicians and public opinion in favour of military conflict.

What does war make? PROFIT!

It is long overdue that we all stopped pretending that corruption is something that Johnny Foreigner does.
From the local council up the British Isles are a cesspit of corruption.
That TOO must be a primary target for racial nationalists. WE ARE DIFFERENT!

The Delusion of FREEDOM is Nothing New

An interesting piece from the always very readable Peter Ackroyd, in this instance from, THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND Volume IV REVOLUTION

Chapter 28 The red bonnet (on the French Revolution).

"...More subtle explanations for the absence of revolutionary enthusiasm may be adduced. The English had always been known as a practical and pragmatic race. That is why they had taken the lead in the progress of the Industrial Revolution. The French, on the other hand were known to be speculative and enthusiastic; they followed their theories and ideas like ignes fatui wherever they might lead them. This was, at least , the caricature. Whether a stubborn paysan would concur is another matter.

Nevertheless it was believed by many English contemporaries that the revolution had simply got out of hand, that it had been so driven by first principles that it had strayed from its proper path. The more ardent French revolutionaries saw the events that surrounded them as a miracle play in which they took on the most important roles. They identified themselves with the people; they identified themselves with the national will; they identified themselves with la patrie. William Pitt observed that it was 'a species of tyranny which adds insult to the wretchedness of its subjects, by styling its own arbitrary decrees the voice of the people, and sanctioning its acts of oppression and cruelty under the pretence of the national will'.

One other national myth was at work on the other side of the Channel. Ever since the time of the Glorious Revolution, and perhaps earlier, the English were accustomed to believe themselves to live in a land of liberty. There are traces of this conviction in the thirteenth century, and in the sixteenth century; perhaps it has always been an aspect of national consciousness. The fact that this had never really been the case did not deter its exponents, many of whom would declare the danger to 'English liberties' at any opportunity. Such was the profound sense of many of the English people. They were not likely to follow Danton or Robespierre or even Buonaparte. They were still predominantly in support of George III and William Pitt, king and nation in harmony, even though the king was mad and the nation in distress."

Film Programme Notes

HIGH TREASON

(1929 British film)

The scenario: In 1940/50, world peace is threatened when the "United States of Europe" comes into conflict with the "Empire of the Atlantic States". A shoot out between border guards leads to war becoming likely but the pacifist Peace League intervenes (it is nowhere explained how this London based super group has become so large or powerful).

Meanwhile we learn that the tension is in fact carefully orchestrated by a sinister terrorist group, financed by arms manufacturers, who blow up a rail tunnel under the English Channel (more accuracy points scored and I have often wondered when 'our' security forces will get around to that one).

The President of Europe orders a mass conscription and mobilisation fearing the Atlantic States are preparing a not very sneak attack.

Released in 1929 this is a very flawed film which makes it all the more interesting. Certainly to me.

Made on the cusp of the silent to sound revolution it, like Alfred Hitchcock's Blackmail, was released in both formats. It was a very expensive business to reequip cinemas with the new technology and it took time. It was not an overnight transition.

High Treason was produced by the Gaumont British Picture Corporation who invested heavily in the project.

With a script by L'Estrange Fawcett it was based on the play High Treason by Noel Pemberton Billing.

Starring: Jameson Thomas, Benita Hume, Basil Gill.

The sound film was presented in a London trade show on 9 August 1929, the film then went into UK general release in silent and sound versions on 9 September 1929. The sound version was released in the US by Tiffany Productions in a heavily cut version (running just over 60mins) on 13 March 1930.

We all know that anyone making a science fiction film purporting to show a possible future is liable to come a terrible cropper with just a little hindsight. By advertising itself as the "1930 VISION OF 1940" or in later versions "1950" the makers of HIGH TREASON were making a rod for their own backs. Perhaps better to have simply placed it in 'the not too distant future'.

Comparisons, and they were many, with Fritz Lang's 1927 German expressionist science fiction drama METROPOLIS were unavoidable and hugely unfavourable.

This was not comparing like with like!

The film has undergone a major reappraisal over recent years and the British Film Institute (BFI) now have both the silent and shorter sound version, restored after decades 'missing', available online. The silent version at least is available free on line at BFI.

Visit the British Film Institute (BFI) online and or search for High Treason on BFI Player

A ROD FOR THEIR OWN BACKS

As in this original poster from the US release of the sound version of HIGH TREASON in 1930 advertising the future portrayed as 1940 was just too close ahead.

Although in other parts the film is prophetic and even applicable today when referencing State terrorism.

High Treason the Play

Pemberton Billing was apparently inspired to write his play High Treason after hearing a speech by the then Prince of Wales (later Edward VIII) on Armistice Night 1927 at the Royal Albert Hall (recorded on gramophone record). He said:

"If we are to save ourselves and those that come after us from a renewal in an even more frightful form of all that we suffered in the Great War, we must by our every action, in our everyday conversation, and even in our very thoughts seek peace [...] If we have a duty to our dead, we also have a duty to the living."

The theatrical production of High Treason played at The Strand for only an unlucky 13 performances in 1928.

Perhaps surprisingly, it was taken up by the Gaumont British Picture Corporation as a major film project soon after...

How close was the film to the play? Research underway. I have meant to do a long article on PB for years! Now on the way. CT.

*NOEL PEMBERTON BILLING

An eyebrow or two may have been raised on seeing the name of Noel Pemberton Billing as the original playwright of High Treason!

Noel Pemberton Billing, 1881-1948, was an inventor, aviator, independent politician, and publisher, best remembered now for the sensational libel trial that he was embroiled in (and won) towards the end of the First World War.

Billing had started the journal The Imperialist in 1916 to support his personal parliamentary campaigns, and also to support suffrage and electoral reform.

In 1918 the journal was renamed Vigilante and new contributors included Harold Sherwood Spencer, John Henry Clark and Henry Hamilton Beamish (Also I believe Arthur Kitson)... Names to conjure with!

Elected as an Independent to Parliament at the 1916 Hertford by-election Pemberton Billing finally, after being re-elected in 1918 with an increased majority, resigned his seat in 1921 citing that the House of Commons had been rendered "unwholesome and unfair" by Lloyd George

"at the instigation of a camarilla of International Financiers"!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Colin Todd
BM Candour

Email:
akctrust@yahoo.co.uk

A point I cannot repeat enough is that, in the UK when IN prison one has more freedom of communication than when OUTSIDE on probation and under the control of the British Stasi, PREVENT, when you can be re-jailed for communicating with the same people you were openly in contact with when in prison. Pure nonsense of course. They do not do irony. This means this communication will be the last from Alison Chabloz until the end of her probation time. (See right column this page).

Received via Email a Prisoner 30/9/2021

Dear Colin,

Thanks for your email...

I am well. My extended stay courtesy of HMP Bronzefield has been a far less unpleasant experience than in Spring. This is mainly due to the lifting of Covid restrictions, although masks are still mandatory and chronic staff shortages are to blame for weekend lockdowns: HGV drivers are not the only ones in short supply.

With my release now imminent (as you rightly suggest) it's time to respond to the spin of "most" and clarify my reasons for appealing. Firstly though, a few words on the Appeal itself.

My intuition tells me that there must have been a fair amount of backroom shenanigans following Day 1 at Southwark Crown Court (backed up by several emails received before the retrial and indeed reassurances that it was 'highly unlikely' that I would be sent back to prison after serving a first full sentence).

In a rather brutal shift from the first day, Day 2 began with instructions from His Honour Judge Beddoe that my stuff be bagged-up, and that I should not leave the precincts during breaks, etc. If I had not come prepared with paperwork from probation from my original 2018 sentence, then both the "crown" and one magistrate might have succeeded in persuading the judge to hand me an even longer sentence, plus an absurd ASBO intending to silence me for another two years.

With little to lose, plus another upcoming trial for a parody of Fagin's 'Pick a Pocket', appealing was simply a case of holding my position. (As well, S. 127 of the Comms Act 2003 is slated to be repealed, with the Law Commission's report dwelling substantially on the problematic, for the court of "grossly" as in "grossly offensive".)

Bizarrely, when revisionists abroad (Mahler, Ryssen, Haverbeck, Faurisson (RIP) use their right to appeal and lose, they are then declared by ("most") as Heroes of the Cause. But when it comes to their own kin, "most" choose to sing from a different hymn sheet.

Candour readers must decide for themselves as to the possible reasons for such incongruity.

Cheers!

Alison.

Keep your letters and articles coming...

Sir - That is an excellent article by Steve Smith in #877 Part 1 and I am looking forward to the next issue of Candour.

I want to thank Rob Black and yourself for your hard work.

D. Armstrong. USA.

Sir - What an interesting read Part one of Rights for Whites was. So much hard work by good people.

It gives me hope for the future even now.

Please find £10 enclosed for five extra copies of #877.

ALISON CHABLOZ UPDATE

As this issue goes to print the latest on Ms. Chabloz's situation is as follows from Adrian Davies, QC, her legal representative: "On Wednesday, 18th August, Alison was re-sentenced following the failure of her appeal. HH Judge Beddoe said that the sentence imposed by District Judge Snow was in his view too lenient, especially as all the offences were committed within such a short time of the previous convictions and were for the same offence.

The Court imposed sentences of twelve weeks each, consecutive on the first and second charges and six weeks, concurrent on the third, and also activated eight weeks of the suspended sentence, the result being that she was sentenced to 32 weeks and must serve sixteen weeks, less the nine weeks that she has already served and the five days since she was remanded in custody on Friday, 13th August.

It follows that Alison should be released on Friday, 1st October."

So that tells us that AC will be out of prison, although silenced by PREVENT, before this issue reaches you. See letter, left column this page, received day before AC's release.

LONDON BRIDGE MEETING
Wednesday 22nd September

An evening meeting and social was held in Central London, on the above date, to remember the late comrade and friend of many racial nationalists Richard Edmonds who died at the end of 2020.

Speakers included Steve Smith (the author of Candour's present Rights for Whites series) and John Morse the former Editor of British Nationalist the Tyndall BNP newspaper.

Adrian Davies, QC, has reported that Mr. Smith's talk was "excellent" and your Editor, although not present, has heard the atmosphere was one of warmth and respect. A fitting tribute to Mr. Edmonds and I am sure not the last.

Copies of our last issue, Candour 877, were sold and favourably commented on.

The fight goes on.

ORDER EXTRA COPIES OF CANDOUR TO PASS ON OR SELL TO CONTACTS

In the UK for a £5.00 note we will send you TWO copies of this or the last issue (877), both 16 pages, flat packed and inclusive of Post & Packing. For a £10.00 note we will send you FIVE! (Tell us if you want a mix of both).

Overseas: talk to us via email and we can work out a GROWING CANDOUR good deal should you require extra copies of this or any other issue.

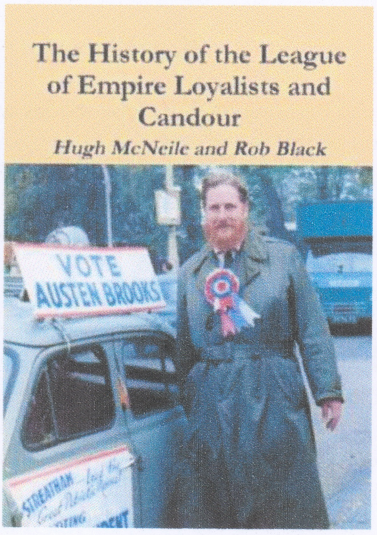
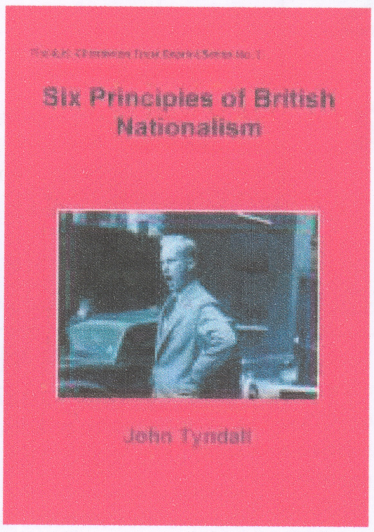
ADVERTISEMENTS





The History of the League of Empire Loyalists and Candour
By Hugh McNeile and Rob Black

The League of Empire Loyalists (LEL) was formed in 1954, a year after this journal, as the active arm of Candour.

Expounding a dynamic creed of patriotism, it attracted a modest but worldwide following and at its peak the LEL managed to force its way into the headlines of the world's press with demonstrations more original, courageous, inventive and attractive than those of any other organisation of the time - an achievement which has not been matched since.

150 pages. Includes previously unpublished photographs and information.
Paperback £12.00. Hardcover with dust jacket £22.00.

Six Principles of British Nationalism
By John Tyndall

No. 7 in our Reprint series. First printed in 1966 when John Tyndall was the Leader of the Greater Britain Movement and reprinted in 1970 when Tyndall was allowed to join the National Front.

The Six Principles according to JT were: 1. Nationalism - Policy and Faith. 2. Britain as a World Power. 3. Economic Nationalism. 4. Preserving the British. 5. Duties of Government. 6. Regeneration Within.

46 pages. A5. Glossy card cover. £6.00.

LONDON TIDINGS
"Let Right Be Done"

Background

Recently found amongst the huge amount of A. K. Chesterton's papers still held by the AK Chesterton Trust, and mostly yet to be examined, were 41 'scannable' issues of London Tidings ranging between No.'s 54 -101.

We are researching the background of this, today, almost unknown journal. The little we know seems to be as follows.

LT was founded in 1946 as a partnership between the famous writer/journalist Douglas Reed (Insanity Fair, etc.) and someone called Barry Lillis of 7 Montpelier St. London, SW7. The partnership being dissolved on 19/4/47.

A.K. Chesterton using the name Philip Faulconbridge becomes the main writer from at least issue 54. (Note: this is six years before AK launched Candour using the same pen name.)

After issue 66 the name of Barry Lillis disappears from the journal and the owner becomes The Beaufort Press, Ltd. At the same address as previously noted. A.K. was also Deputy Editor of Truth from 1944 until the early 1950's.

No. 54. April 26, 1947.

Founded by Douglas Reed in 1946 London Tidings was published weekly until 1948. (123 issues).

AK Chesterton became the lead writer, using the pen name Philip Faulconbridge from at least issue 54.

The present Editor of Candour discovered these 41 surviving copies and scanned them before they were lost. The paper was poor post-war quality. Here we are offering you Douglas Reed, AK Chesterton and even Otto Strasser writings!

CANDOUR Extra!

878 October-November 2021 Subscribers Only

Into 2022 with a £500 Appeal for Flags & Equipment

Candour* is regrowing, this is our fifth issue of 2021 and the second successive 16-pager. Now other elements come into play.

Candour is much more than a views-letter. Founded in 1953 we were the voice of the incredibly active League of Empire Loyalists formed in 1954 and which campaigned through to the 1960's.

We racial nationalists are certainly in no condition to take to the streets en masse. That does not mean we should be hiding in caves waiting for 'the day' or 'the Leader' or using any of the other tired old excuses for inaction.

I am sure that having read the latest installment of Steve Smith's Rights for Whites you appreciate that success is achievable with planning, organisation, patience and especially with choosing our ground.

That is where we are now.

As ever we must step up a gear. Then another.

The reasons for our fundraising may not always be obvious nor do I intend to explain all of them. Who explains their strategy to the enemy? Who of you would expect me to do so?

Right now we need to stock up on brass fitted 7' flagpoles, leather carrying belts and bits. A selection of flags including, Union, St. George, Rhodesian UDI and others. Also we are going to build a small stock of banners for suitable occasions.

You think about how many times a banner could be used with the slogan ALL JOURNALISTS ARE LIARS! on a montage of the logos of the BBC, ITN, SKY, The Sun, Daily Telegraph, The Mirror, etc. Welcome on many demos!

DENNIS HUTCHINGS WO1 (RCM) RIP

Dennis Hutchings was a British soldier during the mis-named Northern Ireland 'Troubles'. He was to be hounded to death by lawyers and politicians. The same politicians who gave 'letters of comfort' to terrorists to protect them from prosecution washed their hands of the British soldiers who fought the bloody war. (As ever). Mr. Hutchings is to be laid to rest on Armistice Day, Thursday 11th November next at 1300hrs at The Minster Church of St. Andrew's, Royal Parade, Plymouth, PL1 2AD.

He had a terminal illness and died of 'Covid' during his show 'trial' in Belfast very recently. You will have to look for the full shameful story online.

Nationalists will attend the occasion.

Politicians, I hear, would be best advised to steer clear...

YOUR DONATIONS = GROWTH & RECHARGING OUR BATTERIES!

As I wrote on page 11 of this issue we are financially over reaching some by keeping Candour at 16 pages + 2 page Extra! (our ideal for the subscription cost is 12 pages + 2 page Extra! which keeps us in the next postal bracket down) until we complete the 4 parts of the important Rights for Whites series by Stephen Smith. (Which with additional material will be appearing as a book in 2022).

The Link has been formed to aid victims of State oppression and anti-race laws. Since the implementation of various measures, ostensibly to combat the menace of terrorism, many patriotic dissidents have been arrested and harassed as a deliberate act of political policy and social engineering.
We urgently need information about anyone who has been imprisoned or threatened by the ever encroaching Liberal Marx-ist State.
